Patrick McGee Named to Lead Maryland Division of Parole and Probation

TOWSON, MD (April 21, 2008)---Patrick McGee, a 35-year veteran who has done virtually every job in the Maryland Division of Parole and Probation (DPP), has been named its Interim Director, subject to confirmation by the Maryland Senate.

"Pat McGee is a leader whose experience speaks for itself," said Gary Maynard, Secretary of the Maryland Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services, the parent agency of the Division of Parole and Probation. "He knows community corrections and has helped Maryland become a leader in research-driven programs that help ex-offenders turn their lives around."

Mr. McGee is a Baltimore native, a graduate of Calvert Hall College High School and Loyola College, where he earned a B.A. in Political Science. He began his DPP career as an agent in 1974, and rose steadily through the ranks: from Substance Abuse Coordinator to Field Supervisor I and II; to Program Administrator; Deputy Director for Program Services; and Executive Deputy Director.

In addition to being a DPSCS Manager of the Year (2006), Mr. McGee has served as technical advisor to the Governor's Drug and Alcohol Abuse Commission from 1990-94 and as a Certified Correctional Trainer. Many times, he has been selected as a conference presenter for the National Association of Drug Court Professionals, the National Legal Aid Defender's Association, and the Maryland Criminal Justice Association, among others. Along the way, he has played key roles in many trend-setting parole and probation efforts that have earned Maryland nationwide—and worldwide--- attention, such as Proactive Community Supervision.

As Director of the Maryland Division of Parole and Probation, Mr. McGee will oversee a critical public safety agency with 1,200 employees, 44 field offices and a roughly $100 million budget . DPP agents supervise approximately 70,000 people in communities all over Maryland.

“I find it very rewarding to help change lives,” says Mr. McGee. “And changing lives, meeting a variety of challenges, and making the public safer are all a part of what Parole and Probation does on a daily basis. Agents are true public safety heroes, and they have my full support as we work together to make Maryland communities safer.”
